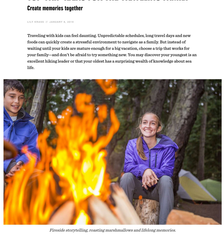
TOP TRIP IDEAS FOR THE TRAVELING FAMILY

Create memories together

LILY FERGUS / JANUARY 8, 2021

Traveling with kids can feel daunting. Unpredictable schedules, long travel days and new foods can quickly create a stressful environment to navigate as a family. But instead of waiting until your kids are mature enough for a big vacation, choose a trip that works for your family—and don't be afraid to try something new. You may discover your youngest is an excellent hiking leader or that your oldest has a surprising wealth of knowledge about sea life.



Fireside storytelling, roasting marshmallows and lifelong memories.

Whether you're just starting to venture out a little farther as a family or your kids are already seasoned travellers, this list of family-friendly trips will help you plan a long weekend, spring break or summer vacation that'll be fun for everyone. By sharing your sense of adventure with your little ones from a young age, you'll set them on a lifelong path of exploration—and hopefully it won't be much longer before they're carrying your backpack.

Kayak the San Juan Islands, Washington

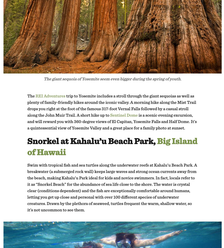
Kayaking around the San Juan Islands is an exciting and family-friendly way to enjoy the natural beauty of the Pacific Northwest. Kids and parents alike will love the abundance of marine life—including otters, orcas and sea lions—in this archipelago.

Kayaking in the San Juan Islands opens up a world of discovery and exploration for the whole family.

If you live in the Northwest, the San Juans make for an easy weekend getaway; a few hours by passenger ferry from Seattle or car ferry from Anacortes. Or for the 100 Adventures for San Juan Islands Family Trip you'll have the opportunity to paddle between the shores of some of the 172 islands in the archipelago, hike to the top of Mount Constitution for sweeping panoramic views, getting hands-on experience with sea stars, jellyfish and other underwater life. After exploring via kayak, hop on to ferries and cycle to San Juan County Park on the west shore of San Juan Island where your family can enjoy whale watching over a picnic lunch. Don't forget to swing by the Whale Museum in Friday Harbor before or after your trip to learn all about the sea mammals in the area.

Walk Among Giant Sequoias in Yosemite

A walk through the giant sequoias in Yosemite National Park feels straight out of a Dr. Seuss book. The gargantuan trees rise higher than a 20-story building, with trunks as wide as 30 feet in diameter. The Mariposa Grove is between Yosemite Village and Wawona, and the largest grove in the park is well worth a visit. Accessible year-round, the grove contains 500 mature giant sequoias, and a network of elevated walkways leads through some of the most notable giants in the Mariposa Grove. The roof's namesake, the Grizzly Giant is the largest and oldest tree in the park, soaring 210 feet high and estimated to be at least 1,800 years old.



The giant sequoia of Yosemite seem even bigger during the spring of youth.

The REI Adventures trip to Yosemite includes a stroll through the giant sequoias as well as plenty of family-friendly hikes around the iconic valley. A morning hike along the Mist Trail drops you right at the base of the famous 317-foot Vernal Falls followed by a casual stroll along the John Muir Trail. A short hike up to Sentinel Dome is a scenic evening excursion, it's a self-contained trip with lodging included, so you don't have to drive back and forth. It's all centered around Yosemite Valley and gives you five family photos at sunrise.

Snorkel at Kahalu'u Beach Park, Big Island of Hawaii

Swim with tropical fish and sea turtles along the underwater reefs at Kahalu'u Beach Park. A breakwater (a submerged rock wall) keeps large waves and strong ocean currents away from the shore, so this is a safe place for kids of all ages and experience levels to snorkel. It's also an "Snorkel Bend" for the abundance of sea life close to the shore. The water is crystal clear (conditions dependent) and the fish are exceptionally comfortable around humans, letting you get up close and personal with over 100 different species of underwater creatures. Drawn by the plethora of seaweed, turtles frequent the warm, shallow water, so it's not uncommon to see them.

Kahalu'u Bay Surf & Sea rents snorkel equipment, paddle boards and surfboards, so there's no need to travel with your own gear. The beach park has showers and bathrooms as well as picnic tables. You'll find a lifeguard on duty during the day and concession stands that sell burgers and shaved ice.

Raft the Rogue River, Oregon

There aren't many family trips you can take that are equally as relaxing for adults as they are entertaining for young kids, but the Rogue River in southern Oregon is this list perfectly. The Rogue's headwaters begin high in the Cascades, flowing through dense forests, farmlands, orchards and rugged canyons toward the Pacific Ocean. The river's gentle and shallow nature makes it ideal for wildlife watching—some of the Rogue River's bald and blue herons ever overhead—but it's also a fun, family-friendly whitewater class IV rapid (Blossom Bar) keep things exciting, while long stretches of flatwater and side hikes offer a mellow escape when you're ready to hop out of the boat. Kids will love paddling through gentle sections in the inflatable dinghy and jumping off the raft in the afternoon sun, while adults can kick back and leave all the decision making to the guides.

The Rogue is one of the original eight rivers to receive Wild and Scenic status, created by Congress in 1968 to protect and preserve rivers in their free-flowing condition. Bald eagles and blue herons ever overhead while you camp along the shore on one of the Rogue's many sand bars. And if camping isn't your family's preference, but you'd still like to experience all the Rogue has to offer, consider staying at one of the river's wilderness lodges.

Visit Great Sand Dunes National Park and Preserve, Colorado

The vastness of Great Sand Dunes National Park and Preserve is almost overwhelming at first sight, a massive sandbox seemingly built for giants. Driving in, the dunes look strikingly out of place, a strange, sandy spread in the shadow of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains. The colossal mounds of sand soar up to 750 feet in height, making them the largest dunes on the continent.

A sandboard or sand sled (neither are for root inside the park) is a fun way for kids to enjoy the simple freedom of the sand dunes, and the lack of defined trails allow kids to wander wherever they please. After a long walk in the sand, stop by Medano Creek to splash, float or tube through the shallow ways of seasonal that flows along the southern end of the dunes.

It's best to visit in the spring or fall, when high temperatures are in the mid 80s. In the heat of the summer, the sand feels hot enough to cook sunfeet, making it tough to spend more than a few minutes in the dunes. The Pinon Flats Campground is close to the visitor center and offers great views of the dunes and the Sangre de Cristos. The campground is open April 3 through October 31 and has 88 individual campsites for tents or RVs.

Zip-line Through the Rain Forest, Costa Rica

If you're ready to venture a little farther out as a family, a trip to the Costa Rican rain forest is an exciting and kid-friendly way to explore a new country. Costa Rica's diverse ecosystems offer a wide variety of recreation, with thrilling zip-line tours and picturesque beaches that will please family members of all ages. Plus, it's an easy flight from most major U.S. cities, which means a relatively low chance of grumpy, jet-lagged kids.

Introduce your kids to a dose of adventure in Costa Rica.

Most will agree that one of the best ways to enjoy the vibrant colors of Costa Rica is from the treetops. REI Adventures offers an 8-day family trip that's jam-packed with zip-lining, hiking, canyoning and rafting. The rain forest in Arenal Volcano National Park offers some of the best opportunities for zip-lining, with sturdy steel cables that stretch anywhere from 20 to 1,200 feet through the dense canopy. Canyoning involves hiking to a waterfall and then using the canyon to descend down the 1,640-foot Arenal Volcano, which sits 2,000 feet above sea level. Rafting on the Sarapiqui River, where up to two dozen wildlife species and 200,000 zebra migrants more than 600 miles through the park and nearby game reserves spanning two countries, and back again.

Inspection of ugly, discovering the magnificent of Tanzania makes for an exciting adventure.

REI's Tanzania Family Adventure & Safari mixes is engaging activities alongside classic safari experiences, including a hot air balloon ride over the Serengeti and a boat ride in a way to see the countryside and meet some of the tribes who inhabit them. The visit to a traditional Maasai village in the nearby highlands is an unforgettable experience, with opportunities for kids to play soccer or do arts and crafts with local children in the area.

The variety of wildlife you'll see in the Serengeti is the stuff of storybooks. Lions are the only big cat in the world that live in prides, and the Serengeti is home to over 3,000 of these dominant creatures. Prides of up to 30 lions populate the grassy plains with cheetahs, leopards and packs of hyenas filling out the top of the food chain. Hippos and elephants wallow in the shallow watering holes, and over 500 species of birds soar high above the grasslands.

Dry season in the Serengeti is from January through March or June through October and offers the best opportunities for wildlife viewing.
